In Game Over, Leah Rogers writes about her three-year journey being owned by a savage pimp who demanded her to sell her body to maintain his "business". His form of control and brainwash, led to countless brutal beatings, abrasive attacks, an abominable rape at gunpoint and the inside of his vehicle trunk.

As soon as Leah Retaliated against her pimp, she would soon find out that she was no longer just fighting for her own life but also fighting for her unborn son that belonged to her pimp.

She pleads for her life at gunpoint praying that God would spare her life for the sake of her four children. Unaware of what Leah had prayed and asked for, a police investigation of her pimp's case ends when undercover officers plot a scheme to catch the pimp in a formal meeting with underage girls.

Charged with her pimp's twenty-one felony counts, Leah was behind the steel cold bars of jail when an investigator continues to interrogate her about how she was more than just a prostitute working for herself.

An inspiring ending to her story will catch you by surprise when the detective that formally arrested Leah, goes out on a limb to give her a second chance at life.

No Longer a victim but a survivor, Leah fought for her life during the time asking herself repetitively, "why me?" Unsuspecting that she was fighting to get out alive and use her voice to speak in front of others as an encourager, mentor and advocate that can say, "Game over!"

Very good book.

By Rosie

I think this book is a good eye opener for everyone. Definitely worth the $10 for the book. I don't even know where I saw this book online some where a few months back before it even came out & I wanted it to read even though I haven't been in a situation like this (thank god). It's crazy & sad the book it's self. However most importantly amazing that she mad it out of that lifestyle. She definitely was/is a strong woman. I hope others in her same situation make it out like she did, even if it's a struggle sometimes.

Tears

By Na S.

I have cried tears reading this book. I am so grateful to God this is not my life. Fathers, love your daughters. Mothers, protect them. Women, be kind to one another. People, let's stop judging. May God shine His face upon Leah and bless her coming and going and protect her children. What a story of survival.
